

Terms and Conditions

for participating in an audio and/or video meeting of the Beilstein-Institut zur Förderung der Chemischen Wissenschaften

- Every invitation by the Beilstein-Institut to an audio and/or video meeting is a personal invitation. The access data sent to the Beilstein-Institut is personal and may not be passed on without consulting the Beilstein-Institut.
- Our Privacy Policy provides information on the data protection conditions for your participation.
- By releasing a comment within and after the meetings or forums, you agree that your statements may be made available to other participants. All participants are responsible for the contributions they publish.
- Any form of discrimination or defamation of people or groups based on their origin, religious affiliation, nationality, physical condition, sexual identity, gender, income or age will not be accepted.
- Insulting, inciting, defamatory, pornographic, inflammatory, harmful to young people or even punishable statements will be deleted.
- In the case of links to external websites, we reserve the right to check linked content and, if necessary, to remove the URL or the entire comment in the event of violations of these conditions by the linked content.
- It is not permitted to record the meeting or parts thereof. The unauthorized recording of non-public conversations is punishable by law.
- Discuss objectively. There is no place for unobjective and/or insulting comments. Refrain from provoking others personally and observe the rules of politeness, as in a direct conversation.
- Make sure that you have the rights to distribute the content you publish. Quotations must be correctly marked as such, even if they are very well known. Respect the copyright.
- Respect the personal rights of your fellow human beings and the right to your own image. Do not publish personal such as addresses or phone numbers.
- In order not to exclude anybody, the prevailing meeting language (English) should be used if possible.
- We look forward to your participation and wish you and us interesting contributions and an enriching exchange!
